Why the CA Combination Makes Sense

Our motivation in doing such a deal was to allow our product lines' full potential to be released. I am convinced that we have a significant opportunity on our hands. We need the channel breadth and financial backing to realize these goals. Computer Associates has the financial strength, distribution channel and resources to bring our respective product lines to thousands of customers we could not previously reach. Ultimately this will ensure growth of our products.

Your Future

One of the major reasons CA is interested in Concord is because of our team of people and the intellectual capital Concord's people bring to this transaction. Therefore, it is anticipated that Concord's operations will be integrated with CA's Business Unit Group. It is expected that the acquisition will close in mid-2005. We will keep you informed of developments as they occur.

This strategic combination will bring together Concord's eHealth and Spectrum product lines with CA's Unicenter, expanding our ability to deliver a new generation of software that simplifies IT management, and enabling customers to reduce the number of management tools required to map, measure and manage the health and performance of IT infrastructure components and the business services that rely on them.

The benefits for both Concord and CA are significant:

Strong Foundation

As I mentioned earlier, combining with CA will provide Concord with the resources to accelerate the growth of our eHealth and Spectrum lines. CA has been a recognized management software expert for more than 28 years with operations in more than 100 countries around the world. With over 15,000 employees, an R&D budget of approximately $650 million per year, 300+ global patents and rock-solid technology we will together be able to 1) provide a self managing infrastructure that is service aware and self healing, 2) deliver IT as a service allowing customers to map IT to the business and make decisions based on business impact, and 3) extend a service oriented architecture with deep and broad integration, role based management and standards and best practices.

Unique Solution

Together Concord and CA will create customer value through self-managing infrastructure solutions that provide the ability to deliver IT as a service while lowering the cost of ownership through a service oriented architecture. We will now be positioned to deliver the industry's only automated multi-vendor end-to-end solution for integrated fault and performance management across network, system and application infrastructures from both a real-time and historical perspective. It will all add up to a proven way to manage customers, services and infrastructure across the hall or around the world with a solution that is practical, achievable and delivers rapid time to value.

Customer Focused

Concord and CA share a corporate culture that stresses there is nothing more important than customers. Upon closing, CA anticipates adding Concord's 4,000 customers to among the ranks of corporations that rely on Unicenter. We will measure our success by our customers' satisfaction. We will compete fairly on value, technology, domain expertise, and customer support to maintain the honesty, integrity and respect that you would expect of a world-class company.

I would like to extend a personal thank you for your continued loyalty and support during these times of change at Concord. Use this as an opportunity to find out what we are all capable of. The quality of the relationships with our customers will be the ultimate indicator of success and we will do all we can to ensure the highest levels of satisfaction.

I have attached a recent Boston Globe article with an interview from the President of CA if you want to get to know your new CEO.

As always, my door is open. If you have any further questions or concerns I encourage you to call me at 1-508-303-4200 or email me at jblaeser@concord.com.

A NEW CEO WHOSE FIRST TASK IS TO RESTORE TRUST

BYLINE: BY Robert Weisman

BODY:

Last month John Swainson, 50, took over as chief executive of Computer Associates International Inc., an Islandia, N.Y., computer software company that employs about 500 people in Framingham and Waltham. The Canadian-born Swainson was recruited from IBM Corp. last fall after Sanjay Kumar, the previous Computer Associates chief executive, was ousted during a federal probe into the company's accounting practices. Swainson spoke with Globe technology writer Robert Weisman at the recent LinuxWorld conference in Boston.

Q. Where do you want to take Computer Associates?

A. There are two priorities in the short term. The first is completing the process of stabilizing the company. But even more important is creating a strategy that focuses on customers and focuses on the things Computer Associates can do successfully in the marketplace.

Q. How hard is it to rebuild confidence when your predecessor was indicted on charges of accounting fraud?

A. Well, I'm not under any illusions. I talked about it a few weeks ago with Michael Capellas [who took over MCI, then called WorldCom, after an accounting scandal]. And he said it takes two to two and a half years. And I think that's probably true. My quick answer is I'll tell you when we get there. But my expectation is that it will take several years.

Q. What's the biggest change you've seen calling on customers?

A. The selling environment is more difficult than it's been in the past. When information technology was dominated by the priesthood, a very small number of highly trained people, it was possible for vendors to dictate to customers.

That has dramatically changed. Now you see customers who have more technology skill, frankly, than many of the vendors do. Some of the investment banks we deal with on Wall Street have used technology as a competitive weapon and have skills comparable to anything we have in any of our development labs.

Q. Why did Computer Associates acquire Netegrity of Waltham last year?

A. We acquired them because they were the best of breed in Web security. And we needed something to complete our security solution. We're tightly integrating their products with the rest of our products.

Q. Will Netegrity remain as an independent brand?

A. We haven't decided yet, to be honest with you. Netegrity has a lot of brand equity. We've added it to our existing brand, called eTrust. And right now we've sort of fudged it by calling it eTrust Netegrity.

Q. Do you plan to expand your operations in the Boston area?

A. We have a sizable operation in the Route 128 corridor. This is a core part of our franchise now. But we're currently not expanding our business anywhere.

Q. Do you see more consolidation in the technology industry?

A. No question. There are too many players in the technology industry. Many of them are not really profitable and many of them are too small. The customers increasingly want to deal with a smaller number of vendors. And there are some substantial economies that come with one larger integrated vendor rather than a number of smaller ones.

Q. Will Computer Associates be part of that consolidation trend, either as a buyer or a seller?

A. We've been a part of it already. Certainly we were active in the market last year as a buyer, and I think we'll be active this year. My intent is to build our company through a mixture of acquisition as well as organic growth.

Q. Seems like it's a lot harder to make money in technology today. Is the business still as much fun as it was in the late 1990s?

A. It's not as easy as it was. You can't sit back and watch the money roll in. You have to always be planning your next move.
