1. I read that eight (8) former Ibbotson associates left Morningstar in mid-June to go to Mesirow. The article implied that Mesirow raided the 8 former employees. Was this the case, or did Morningstar let them go? What were their job duties? Will they be replaced? How will the new asset allocation unit that they are now running for Mesirow compete with Morningstar's own? Have they (Mesirow and/or the 8) taken client assets? Is the Ibbotson operation currently under-staffed, and if so, by how many and in what role(s)?

Eight former Ibbotson employees did recently join Mesirow Financial. During any acquisition we expect to see some attrition and job losses because of redundant positions. Of the eight employees who went to Mesirow, some were not retained by Morningstar following the acquisition and several others were no longer working in the Ibbotson business unit.

Those who left came from a combination of departments, including consulting, research, and other business units at Morningstar. Over the next several months, we anticipate that a couple of these positions will be filled and others will not. We're continuing to recruit for open positions in this part of our business and others, but Ibbotson Associates' research area is currently fully staffed. The departure of these employees has not had a material impact of our operations.

Morningstar offers a wide range of products and services to the financial services industry and so we are competitor, partner, and vendor to many companies in the industry. It's only natural that some former Ibbotson employees will find employment in the same industry, sometimes as client and other times as competitor. We appreciate these employees who contributed to Ibbotson's growth over the years and are happy that they have gone on to pursue new careers in the industry.

Mesirow provides some of the same services as Morningstar including asset allocation modeling, fund selection, and due diligence for institutional investors and could be considered a competitor in those areas. However, the new business unit formed at Mesirow has had minimal impact on our operations. Only one of our consulting accounts, which had the lowest annual contract value, has migrated to Mesirow.

In a separate development related to staffing in this unit, we recently announced the appointment of Peng Chen, currently chief investment officer for Ibbotson, as president of Ibbotson Associates. Peng replaces Mike Henkel, who will be staying on to help transition Peng into his new role and then working for us on a consulting basis to help support our investment consulting and retirement advice areas until June 30, 2007. Peng has been with Ibbotson for almost nine years and is one of the foremost experts on asset allocation. He has been a key player in building the business and in developing Ibbotson products, particularly its asset allocation and 401(k) advice and management retirement account services. We're happy with the team we have in place for Ibbotson and feel good about our business opportunities in this area.
