WisdomTree does not believe that the planned changes to the Funds' portfolios are likely to generate any negative tax consequences for current investors. Investors that believe the Funds' new objectives meet their investment needs do not need to take any action and can simply hold onto their current positions.

Investors that wish to maintain exposure to dividend-paying stocks, including stocks in the financial sector, may want to consider moving their investment out of the Funds and into one of the other WisdomTree ETFs. If you sell shares of a Fund you may incur capital gains or losses upon the sale of your shares. We suggest that you consult a tax adviser to better understand how this might impact your specific tax situation.

In light of recent market events, some clients have expressed an interest in achieving exposure to dividend paying stocks without having exposure to the financial sector. The planned changes to the Funds are designed to provide investors with the tools to do this. The planned changes do not impact any of the forty other WisdomTree Equity ETFs. WisdomTree remains fully committed to our fundamental approach that uses dividends as a primary metric of value to generate income and achieve long-term investment goals across all sectors. Once the changes are implemented WisdomTree investors will have the ability to invest in an array of fundamentally-weighted ETFs that provide broad market exposure, as well as ETFs that provide specific sector exposure or that eliminate exposure to the financial sector.
