The following is an email and slide deck sent from Fran Rosch, Executive Vice President of Symantec's Norton Business Unit, to employees of LifeLock, Inc. on December 22, 2016.

Team,

I hope everyone is getting ready for the holidays and some well-deserved time off. I'm sending this one last note before the end of the year to share my thoughts on the importance of culture in our organization.

I'm confident that we've defined the right strategy for implementation once the merger closes—building a comprehensive consumer digital safety solution, including device protection, identity protection and protection for the connected home and family. Still, it doesn't matter how fantastic our strategy is if we don't execute effectively as a team. It's critical that we work together after the acquisition is finalized in order to further develop a great culture for our newly combined organization. After lots of conversations with Hilary and the broader LifeLock team, I know we all agree that continuing to foster the great culture we have and to continue living our values is critical to our success.

Jill Nash and team have shared an overview of the LifeLock culture and employee experience with me, and I was very impressed to see how well it aligned with our own culture and employee experience. I really like the way your organization lives your values as part of all you do, especially with regard to performance management, hiring and the promotional process. It's important that we measure people on both results, as well as their approach to working together as a team.

At Symantec, we define our winning culture as: Lead + Innovate + Grow = Win. And these are the behaviors that guide us:

Integrity and accountability

Agility and boldness

Openness and collaboration

Passion and focus

We've also designed a Symantec Leadership Blueprint that provides more detail on what it takes to be successful here. One of my favorite leadership behaviors is to not be a brilliant jerk. We have many absolutely brilliant people within the organization, but we're also always respectful toward everyone with whom we work and respect opinions different than our own.

Another key part of our employee experience is investing in our people through training, coaching and career development. We want our employees to do the best work of their careers here at Symantec and we do all we can to ensure this happens.

Symantec also prioritizes diversity as a key element of success, and we're actively working to improve our current position. A truly great organization has a diverse mix of employees who all bring something different and unique to the team.

We actively survey our employees throughout the year to measure employee engagement, then we develop action plans to ensure we make improvements in areas where focus may be needed, or where we've seen positive progress and want to ensure it continues.

Culture and employee experience is very important here at Symantec, as well as to me personally. I look forward to incorporating some of the great parts of the LifeLock employee experience into our growing consumer business as we focus on making Symantec a truly great place to work. I've attached more information on the Symantec values, our approach to employee experience, and our Leadership Blueprint. I look forward to spending more time on these important topics after close.

Have a healthy and safe holiday. I look forward to getting to know everyone better in 2017.

My best,

Fran
