Note that we are providing financial guidance for fiscal year 2017 assuming a February 1 closing for the AEP transaction. To the extent that the closing is different, the impact will be included in our updated guidance and subsequent quarter conference calls.

We have targeted our fiscal 2017 adjusted free cash flow at $550 million, which was reduced by the $60 million tax receivable payment that was made in the first fiscal quarter. This estimate assumes no impact to working capital and constant currency rates.

Within our adjusted free cash flow guidance, we are also assuming other cash taxes primarily related to international jurisdictions of $80 million and other cash uses of $60 million, primarily related to items such as integration expenses and synergy realization cost associated with Avintiv and AEP.

The potential combination of AEP with Berry's Engineered Materials division offers the opportunity for significant value creation for Berry and AEP shareholders alike as we realize procurement and operating cost savings across the two organizations. Our initial expectation is to realize $50 million of annual cost synergies within the first two years. I'm pleased to report that we have received early termination of the HSR waiting period from the FTC, and we anticipate the close of the transaction to be completed in the March quarter, subject to the approval of AEP shareholders.

With respect to guidance for fiscal 2017, as Mark discussed, our adjusted free cash flow target is $550 million and assumes successful closing on our acquisition of AEP effective February 1, 2017.

Question And Answer Section

Mark W. Miles

Chief Financial Officer, Berry Plastics Group, Inc.

Good morning. So we have – as Tom I think noted in the opening comments, we received early termination, so the regulatory approval from the FTC is complete. And so now we're just going through the registration process with the SEC, and we will be filing an amendment soon. So I would say it's on track, normal course. Obviously, it could have went faster had we not been subject to the random review by the SEC, but we were. So we're just going through that process as normal. And again, our next amendment should be filed in the next week.

With respect to AEP, we still feel very comfortable with the annual cash flow that it will generate around $85 million on a normalized basis. In fiscal 2017, however, it is a de minimis impact to our fiscal 2017 results because: A), we only have it for eight months; and more importantly, B), we will have all of the closing costs associated with the acquisition that will impact our free cash flow, such as advisor fees, et cetera, as well as the normal synergy-related cost that we have at the beginning. So the impact to 2017 is very modest, but we still feel very good about the $85 million of free cash that it will add once we get past these startup costs from the acquisition.

With respect to FX, we use basically the end of September's rates. I will tell you we have very little impact from FX. The biggest impact is the euro related to translation. So for us, FX, as you can see in our reported results, has a fairly modest impact due to our heavy concentration in North America, in the U.S. specifically.

* * *

And with respect to interest rates, we have a 1% floor on our floating rate debt. So we have about $2 billion of floating rate debt. To the extent that LIBOR stays below 1%, it's not relevant. To the extent it goes above 1%, you would just have to take that impact times around $2 billion to determine the impact, which will become less as the year unfolds as we pay down that debt because that's the debt that we're paying down throughout the year.

* * *

Okay. We do have – again, we continue to feel confident with the $50 million of cost synergies for AEP. The impact of those synergies is built into our outlook for fiscal 2017, but they're offset again by the costs associated with achieving those that come up front in the transaction. But there is an amount baked in, around $20 million in fiscal 2017.

* * *

And with respect to the tax rate, it was impacted by a couple factors. One was the new accounting regulations that allow – you can take the benefit of stock compensation expense relative to our stock options, as well as the R&D tax credit and some one-time tax planning projects that we completed in the quarter.

[W]hat's the current synergy target for Avintiv, how much have you got via year end and still embedded into 2017? And then with the timing being moved back a little bit for AEP or at least kind of as we had modeled things or thought about things, the $50 million, do you have a sense of timing for that coming through both 2017 and 2018, or kind of how that phases?

Mark W. Miles

Chief Financial Officer, Berry Plastics Group, Inc.

I think with – Chris, good morning. It's Mark, again. With respect to the Avintiv synergy, we still feel good about the $80 million of synergy, $50 million of that realized in our fiscal 2016 results and the remaining $30 million in our fiscal 2017 results. As we identify more synergies related to that transaction that will be upside to the guidance that we've provided with respect to Avintiv.

AEP again, we still feel very confident with the $50 million synergy and I would expect similar to Avintiv that in the second year, we'll be on a full run rate basis. And as we identify more synergies, just as we did with Avintiv, we'll update the market on a quarterly basis.

Chris D. Manuel

Analyst, Wells Fargo Securities LLC

Okay. Do you think that you can get to maybe half of those in the eight months you own it this year, if I were splitting it? Would that be a fair way to think about it or...?

Mark W. Miles

Chief Financial Officer, Berry Plastics Group, Inc.

Yeah, just under that.

Jason A. Freuchtel

Got you. And then I guess in terms of your synergy expectation, I think I noticed in your proxy, you shared that you didn't receive pricing information from AEP. I guess in terms of expecting some synergy benefit from sourcing and pricing, what is it that gives you confidence that you can achieve your synergy expectations both in fiscal 2017 as well as in fiscal 2018?

Thomas E. Salmon

President & Chief Operating Officer, Berry Plastics Group, Inc.

I would say – this is Tom – shareholders should continue to note that our sourcing scale and benefit provide really a valuable competitive advantage for Berry, and I think it's clear historically, some other acquisitions we've done, we've demonstrated the ability to execute on those synergies and we feel very confident in our ability to do so here as well.

Got it. Thanks. And just last question on working capital, I know you guided to flat for 2017. But I guess, sort of ultimately with AEP, do you think you could get some working capital gains going forward?

Jonathan D. Rich, PhD

Chairman, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Berry Plastics Group, Inc.

As we get deeper into that acquisition and to the extent we have opportunities there, we'll certainly update our guidance and look forward to doing that. But for now, we think the right way to view it is flat assumption conservatively for next year.

So first, just back to AEP, it's our understanding that annual negotiations with resin suppliers take place typically in the calendar fourth quarter. With the AEP deal closing in February, are you able to leverage the scale of polyethylene purchases you gain from AEP throughout the entire system in 2017, or is that more of a 2018 event now?

Thomas E. Salmon

President & Chief Operating Officer, Berry Plastics Group, Inc.

Listen, clearly I'll reiterate the sourcing scale definitely benefits us in terms of resin negotiations. While there may be some calendarization when agreements are negotiated, that happens really depending on the opportunity. And clearly we certainly will begin those negotiations with AEP, and we believe that we'll be able to capture the associated benefit from that.

Hey, guys. Good morning. Thanks for taking my questions. I just had a follow-up on Brian's question on the implied fiscal 17 EBITDA guidance. And just a bigger picture bridge, it sounds like we have $30 million from additional Avintiv synergies, eight months of AEP EBITDA, synergies from AEP and then volume growth. You had impressive price/cost in fiscal 2016. Are you anticipating some of this reverses?

Mark W. Miles

Chief Financial Officer, Berry Plastics Group, Inc.

We do have the lag benefit that we received in fiscal 2016 which was just under $10 million. We removed that from our fiscal 2017 guidance. Otherwise, we assume no additional upside.

Do you think given your spending level relative to your current depreciation which is whatever north of $500 million that there're any areas that perhaps need some reinvestment? Maybe it doesn't occur in 2017 but maybe 2018 or 2019 on a more accelerated basis or you feel pretty comfortable with the run rate of $315 million relative to the base of business that exists today?

Mark W. Miles

Chief Financial Officer, Berry Plastics Group, Inc.

I think we feel very comfortable with the $300 million capital budget, plus again about $20 million for AEP which is how you get to the $315 million and achieving the growth rates that we've talked about today.
