Integration Team Members Named

Following the exciting and historic announcement that we have agreed to combine our company with Black & Decker, I would like to take a moment to update you on our integration progress, and let you know how that may affect you in the coming weeks and months.

Acquisition integration has become a publically recognized core competency at Stanley. We have completed 56 acquisitions since 2002, and we have learned many valuable lessons that have helped us refine our process. Our integration methodology is built on people, process and value creation. It is a process that drives a culture of excellence and inclusion, and one that holds integrity, respect, and accountability above all else. It is a process that has successfully driven tangible results and one we are confident will continue to drive value for the combined Stanley Black & Decker post-merger. Fundamentally, our integration process is built on the belief that one plus one can be greater than two, and we have every reason to expect that will be the case with this integration.

The chart attached outlines the core of that process—the Integration Steering Committee, Integration Management Office, and Integration Teams, as well as the leaders from both Stanley and Black & Decker who will direct those teams.

We have asked Brett Bontrager, President of Stanley Convergent Security Solutions (CSS) and Vice President of Business Development, to co-chair the Integration Management Office. Brett has successfully led several integrations and has played a role in the majority of those 56 acquisitions, including our largest to date, Facom Tools. We recognize that integrating Stanley and Black & Decker is a monumental task, so we have reorganized the Stanley CSS team under Brett to ensure that Brett and his team can focus on the task at hand while continuing to drive growth and profitability at CSS. A chart outlining the CSS organization is also appended for reference.

Tony Milano, Global Vice President, Operations for the Black & Decker Power Tools business has been selected to co-chair the integration efforts for Black & Decker. Tony is a global leader with a successful track record of directing numerous complex organizations including sourcing, finance and operations. His broad business experience and functional knowledge position him well to address the challenges and opportunities of the integration.

Tony and Brett will be joined in the Integration Management Office by a team of senior executives who have proven their ability to deliver results.

The Integration Management Office will include:

- Bert Davis, Senior Vice President of Business Transformation and CIO, who will be focused on Information Systems for the new combined entity and will also serve as Integration Team Leader for IT
  - Lee McChesney, Chief Financial Officer of Stanley Mechanical Access Solutions, who will be the finance lead for the integration and will be responsible for tracking synergy achievement and costs as well as oversight of the integration of the combined finance organizations including accounting, finance, tax and treasury organizations.
- Joe Voelker, Vice President of Human Resources, who will be focused on HR initiatives and on driving HR processes at the combined companies as well as oversight of the integration of the combined human resources organizations. As part of this role, Joe will also lead communications efforts regarding integration.

There will be 13 specific integration teams; each of these will be co-chaired by an executive of Stanley and of Black & Decker. These teams will develop the detailed plans to integrate the two companies, capture the synergies and provide the platform for future growth. In order to keep the businesses focused on their customers and on their operational and strategic commitments, the synergy teams will coordinate with, but be managed separately from, line operations.

Integration Team Leaders will include:

TEAM	STANLEY LEADER	BLACK & DECKER LEADER	TEAM	STANLEY LEADER	BLACK & DECKER LEADER

In addition, we have retained Bain & Company, who has supported hundreds of successful mergers and was involved in the successful Facom Tools integration in 2006. Bain will support the overall integration process and provide analytical support, tools, experience and objectivity as we go through this process.

Bain's approach stands on the same three pillars on which we have founded our integration process:

- Capture the value in the transaction
- Ensure we retain the best characteristics of both companies
- Focus the integration process on key decisions to minimize distractions in the base business

The integration will be overseen by the Integration Steering Committee, which, in addition to Nolan Archibald and myself as co-chairs, will be comprised of Jim Loree, Don Allan, Mark Mathieu, and Massimo Grassi. We will have weekly team meetings, Integration Management Office meetings and Steering Committee meetings, and we are committed to communicating our progress to you.

While we will have dedicated integration teams, the execution of the integration plan will be carried out by the businesses and their capable teams. This integration will touch us all in some way, and while the integration team will be focused on driving the process and supporting the business leaders, many of you will be asked to contribute to our integration initiatives. Until then, however, we ask that each of you continue to focus on our customers and our core business.

Integrating our two great companies will undoubtedly be a challenging task, and there will be unanticipated pitfalls and unintended roadblocks. But the dedication and commitment to execution that you've shown gives us confidence that you will rise to this challenge, and you will unlock the potential value that will come from combining these two companies.

Thank you.

John Lundgren
