Included in this edition of Merger Update are some answers to a host of questions regarding approvals for the merger, as well as details on aspects of merger integration work.

Thank you for continuing to submit questions and for your ongoing commitment to delivering great service to customers during the merger process.

What is the latest with Massachusetts regulatory approval?

Last Thursday, the Massachusetts Department of Public Utilities (MDPU) announced it officially revised its merger review standard, requiring all mergers it approves to have a net benefit to the public. This is a change from the original no net harm standard, and it will apply to the NSTAR/NU merger. At this time, a new procedural schedule has not been set.

Why was the Massachusetts standard modified?

The MDPU justified the change in standard as needed to address provisions associated with the Global Warming Solutions Act and the Green Communities Act. Both pieces of legislation were designed to help Massachusetts grow renewable energy sources and cut back on greenhouse gas emissions.

Does the merger meet this new standard?

We are confident that the NU/NSTAR merger will meet the net benefits standard. In Massachusetts, NSTAR and NU have already embraced the requirements of green legislation in a number of ways, such as signing long-term contracts with wind developers and consistently taking a leadership role in energy efficiency programs for customers. In addition, NU and NSTAR are already partnering on the Northern Pass Transmission project, which will bring low-carbon power from Hydro-Québec in Canada to the region. Together, NU and NSTAR will continue these types of initiatives and more. This merger is good news for customers, employees, and the environment.

Does the Connecticut DPUC review the merger?

At this time no. Last November, the Connecticut Department of Public Utility Control (DPUC) responded to a letter from Connecticut's Attorney General stating that while it would follow merger developments closely, it did not have jurisdiction over the merger. After the Office of Consumer Counsel requested a review of that finding late last year, the DPUC issued a draft decision in late January, reiterating its view that since there is no change in the ownership structure of Connecticut Light and Power and Yankee Gas, the DPUC does not have jurisdiction over the merger. Oral arguments on that draft decision were held on February 18 and the DPUC said it would also hold a public hearing before issuing a final decision. That hearing has been scheduled for March 25.

What about legislation in Connecticut regarding DPUC authority over the merger?

A bill was raised by the Connecticut Legislature's Energy and Technology Committee on March 3 that would give the CT DPUC authority over the merger. The bill is expected to be debated during the legislative session.

What is the status of the New Hampshire review?

An information-gathering meeting with the New Hampshire Public Utilities Commission (NHPUC) was held in February. The NHPUC is still determining whether it will undertake any additional review of the merger.

We also have federal approvals in progress; what's the latest?

The NU/NSTAR merger of equals also requires a number of additional approvals from key federal organizations. The Federal Communications Commission approval for the transfer of internal communication radio licenses was obtained in January, and the Hart-Scott-Rodino waiting period expired in February. We have requested Federal Energy Regulatory Commission approval by May 1 and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission review is also pending.

What do these different reviews mean for the merger?

State and federal regulatory review has always been a planned for and expected part of the merger process. We continue to honor all regulatory review requests, and remain optimistic on approvals and timing of the merger closing. The reason we decided to merge remains the same: bringing NU and NSTAR together will create a stronger, better company for customers, shareholders and employees.
